Courses designed and taught:

- 0199-380-001 Methods Ensemble—Instructor of Record, Fall 2022, Fall 2023, Fall 2024
 - Applied brass, woodwinds, and percussion in an ensemble setting
 - Students learn to direct ensembles in the schools by playing instruments studied in labs, discussing and playing quality music literature, and conducting the ensemble.
- 0199-271-001 Group Instruction: Brass—Instructor of Record, Fall 2022, Fall 2023, Fall 2024
 - Applied brass in a class setting
 - Prepares prospective music teachers to instruct students in brass playing
 - Designed to provide a practical knowledge of each brass instrument including playing techniques, instrument-specific problems, and teaching techniques for each brass instrument: trumpet, French horn, trombone, tuba

- 0195-135-001 Technology for Music Educators—Instructor of Record, Fall 2022, Fall 2023, Fall 2024
 - Students gain experience with the four major types of uses of technology by music educators: administrative/communication, preparing teaching materials, leading class activities, and student uses of technology
- 0199-351-001 Music Education Methods III, Secondary—Instructor of Record, Spring 2023
 - Designed to prepare and provide the cognitive knowledge, skills, and motivation for prospective music educators to succeed in teaching music at the secondary level (grades 7–12)
 - Students research, explore, and discuss philosophies, curriculum, teaching methods, repertoire, assessment models, and technology relevant to middle and high school
 - Methods and models of assessment using the latest technologies are explored and used
 - Through readings, projects, and class activities the students develop a knowledge base and collect materials and methods that will help them provide broad and effective instruction in their selected musical areas
- 0195-136-001 Music Technology I, General Education—Instructor of Record, Spring 2023
 - This course is an extensive and practical introduction to the basic concepts and techniques involved in the use of contemporary music technology, including MIDI technology, digital synthesis, sampling, sequencing, digital audio production, and digital notation
- 0199-171-001 Vocal Techniques for Music Educators—Instructor of Record, Spring 2023
 - This is a methods class for vocal instruction covering the fundamentals of singing for teachers of K-12 music classes and choirs
 - Topics include respiration, phonation, register development, resonant tone production, diction, expression, and the healthy voice, as well as K-12 vocal technique curriculum of children’s singing voice development
- 0195-413-001 Conducting and Orchestration—Instructor of Record, Spring 2023, Spring 2024 (Independent Study)
 - Orchestration study begins with a review of various instruments and their technical considerations (ranges, transpositions, basic characteristics, etc.) and then moves toward scoring and arranging techniques
 - Orchestration students are required to complete various orchestration projects via hand notation as well as through computer programs (Finale, Sibelius, etc.)
 - Conducting study focuses primarily on fundamental techniques (beat patterns, baton grip, independence of hands, etc.) necessary to rehearse and perform music as a conductor of various types of musical groups—instrumental, vocal, and combinations of these
 - Conducting students are evaluated, formally and informally, on conducting accuracy and clarity and may have opportunities to conduct different ensembles during the class; choral diction will be introduced
- 0832-490-447 Student Teaching in Music Education—Instructor of Record, Spring 2024, Fall 2024
 - Supervision of music education student teachers (elementary and secondary placements)
- 0832-480-447 Reflective Practice Seminar in Music Education —Instructor of Record, Spring 2024, Fall 2024

- Seminar course emphasizing the transition from university student to professional music educator through critical reflection and analysis of student teaching experiences.
- Preparation for New York State certification and employment
- 0195-491-009 Independent Study: Musical Theatre Music Direction—Instructor of Record, Fall 2023
 - This course explores the knowledge, skills, dispositions, and teacher roles that an early-career music educator will need to successfully music-direct a 60-minute musical at the secondary level.
 - Building upon prior music education courses and experiences, students:
 - develop their understanding of musical theatre music pedagogy and its various roles and perspectives, including vocal, musical, and engagement goals in different contexts
 - reflect on how they will train and nurture voices in a musical theatre setting, focusing on developmental issues in the singing voice
 - explore musical theatre repertoire options toward including a variety of styles and approaches including how to select and teach culturally responsive musical theatre repertoire
 - develop rehearsal plans
- 0195-491-007 Independent Study: Music Technology Education—Instructor of Record, Fall 2024
 - This course explores the teacher behaviors, skills, knowledge, and reflective practice associated with instructional design and assessment in the context of Music Technology Education.
 - Building upon prior music education courses and experiences, students:
 - design a music technology course for secondary students
 - create sequential lesson plans
 - decide how they would assess student growth in a real-world teaching scenario
 - practice completing abbreviated versions of the Teacher Work Sample and Teacher Performance Assessment that are required during the student teaching semester

This dissertation is about an approach to music teacher education that attempts to prepare pre-service music teachers to find employment while also preparing them to improve the realities of school teaching and learning for themselves and their students. East Coast University's (pseudonym) music teacher education program was identified through purposeful selection for examination via intrinsic case study. Through snowball sampling, five faculty members were selected for teaching observations and interviews. In addition, focus groups of student and alumni (self-selected through volunteer sampling) helped develop my understanding and description of the case, and identification of a resultant, overarching theme. The research was focused through Biesta's three domains of educational purpose: qualification, socialization, and subjectification. The overarching theme presented in this dissertation involves a dualistic approach to music teacher education: East Coast University prepares music teachers with the skills to win and keep the job and to be change agents capable of improving their educational landscapes. Throughout this intrinsic case study, the researcher's pre-service and in-service teaching stories are interwoven with the participants' stories in ways that are intended to address positionality, contextualize the theoretical framework, and examine more deeply emergent research understandings.
